and the best part was...

"My Anthropology program professors engaged students in respectable and open dialogue where all thoughts were welcome and none were dismissed or shouted down. They were fair and accountable for their own potential bias and strove to better themselves as we, their students, bettered ourselves. The diversity, responsibility, and especially the depth of conversation on various topics of thought were incredibly important for a holistic approach to critical thinking processes where fact and personal stories supported rather than detracted from each other."
