and the best part was...

"I was drawn to Global Development Program because of the quality of the professors in the program and the diversity of the student body. Before beginning the program, I spent hours researching different professors' backgrounds and was struck by the amount of real-world experience that many have had. Beyond the teachers, I have thoroughly enjoyed interacting with the program's students, who range from students abroad to working finance professionals like myself to people working at non-profits implementing some of the very concepts we are learning in class. Learning alongside and from this wide set of perspectives really helps to uncover the many nuances within each concept and presents a level of rigor that I've found both challenging and incredibly rewarding."
